Chicago-based United Continental Holdings, parent of United Airlines, said Tuesday it replaced its CEO and two other top executives, saying the internal and federal probes associated with the Port Authority of New York and New Jersey.

United officials would not elaborate Tuesday, except to say the investigations are ongoing and the company will cooperate with the government. It also would not say if it would do more to raise accounting or financial reporting concerns about United.

Oscar Munoz, 56, president of railroad company CSX and a longtime employee of the Port Authority board member, will take over as president and CEO.

United officials would replacing Jeff Smisek, a former Continental Airlines executive who had headed United since its 2010 merger with Continental. Smisek is receiving nearly $5 million plus other benefits on his way out.

United, headquartered in Chicago, has expanded to two states since 1921, managing bridges, tunnels, airports and transit activities in the Chicago area and northern New Jersey.

Former Port Authority Chairman David Samson's activities have been the subject of document requests from the U.S. attorney's office in New Jersey, including Samson's votes on

A week after a Fox Lake police lieutenant was shot to death, key questions about the investigation and the officer's death remained unanswered. On Tuesday, authorities announced that three men captured on video near the shooting had been ruled out as suspects.

Authorities have not said how many times Lt. Charles Joseph Gliniewicz, 47, was killed with his own weapon. Police have declined to publicly discuss the findings of the autopsy on the 52-year-old officer, who was laid to rest Monday.

Police have shared limited details because they don't want to compromise a potential future prosecution by giving out information that only the perpetrator or a witness would know, said George Flensko, commander of the Lake County Major Crime Task Force.

Before responding officers found him dead the morning of Sept. 1, Gliniewicz had radioed that he was pursuing a possible he described only vaguely: two white males and a black male. An intensive manhunt involving hundreds of police, along with dogs and helicopters, turned up no suspects, and the weeklong investigation has not yielded any charges.

AN AIR TO CUB'S SWING

Mike Bryant passed on to Kris hitting tips from Ted Williams

By PHILIP HERSH | Chicago Tribune

This is one of those stories that would sound apocryphal except its protagonists, father and son, recall it the same way.

The story spans three generations to link Kris Bryant through his father, Mike to one of baseball's legendary hitters, Ted Williams.

As a minor leaguer, Mike Bryant got face-to-face instruction from Williams. He read Williams' classic book on the subject, the "Science of Hitting" as a bible. Mike's favorite verse, the one he recited endlessly to both his sons when they first picked up a bat: hit the ball hard and hit it in the air.

So it was that the first time 5-year-old Kris swung at a hardball pitch from Mike, he hit under the ball and it went adrift and landed it about 130 feet, well into the outfield of a Little League

The car rolled into a central Illinois lake with Amanda Hamm's three young children in the back seat. By the time police arrived, it was too late. All three had drowned. Police later found numerous tiny handprints on the back window by the location of the last remaining air pocket.

Hamm and her boyfriend, Maurice LaGrene Jr., told police they had managed to escape as the muddy waters of Clinton Lake poured into the car.

Authorities found nothing wrong mechanically with her car and ended up clearing both the mother and her boyfriend under the first-degree murder in the children's deaths. LaGrene was convicted and sentenced to life in prison, but a separate Dewitt

County jury acquitted Hamm of their killing, convicting her instead of child endangerment.

Consistent style

Every newspaper (and indeed every news site) is the end product of a massive and ongoing effort on the part of dozens or hundreds of individuals to inform (and entertain) the readership. And because of the number of people involved, it is critical that a publication like a newspaper has an effective and well-communicated style guide, specifying the designer's "tools" for building his or her pages.

Talks between Chicago's school board and the city's striking teachers failed to produce an agreement Monday, leaving more than 350,000 children locked out of the classroom for a second day.

As parents faced another day of figuring out how to care for their children without school, thousands of teachers in red T-shirts flooded the Loop on Monday afternoon to show solidarity for the strike, filling streets and stopping traffic.

"There is a lot of anger," said Vicki Turbov, an English teacher at North-Grand High School in Humboldt Park who has two children attending district high schools. "This is about big stakes, the future of education in our country. This is not about a 2 percent increase."

School Board President David Vitale left talks a little after 6:30 p.m., saying the two sides were going over technical issues and had failed to take up key points of contention, including teacher evaluations and a recall policy. Still, as he has several times before, Vitale expressed optimism that a deal could be reached soon.

"We believe we should resolve this tomorrow. We are close enough to get this resolved," he said. "This is hard work."

Chicago Teachers Union President Karen Lewis left talks about three hours later, and when told of Vitale's suggestion that a deal could be reached Tuesday responded, "Wow."

"That really is up to them," she said.

Asked why teacher evaluations and recalls were not discussed, Lewis said the district did not offer anything new to move those

Peterson attorneys upbeat on trial after prosecution snags

Prosecutors in Drew Peterson's murder trial delayed calling a key witness to the stand Thursday after Judge Edward Burmila put limits on the testimony.

The witness, Harry Smith, a Wheaton divorce attorney, handled Kathleen Savio's divorce and was consulted by Stacy Peterson before she vanished.

Smith's testimony is a key part of the state's argument that Peterson drowned Savio to avoid a trial in their divorce case over how their property would be split up.

Though prosecutors seemed unfazed by the developments, defense attorneys were pleased with how the trial was unfolding.

LONDON — The leader after one rotation of the Olympic gymnastics women's all-around competition: Gabby Douglas. After two rotations: Gabby Douglas. And after four rotations — all of them, the result that requires precision — she's the uneven bars that ask for daredevil will and the desire to fly; the balance-beam that begs an athlete to fall off; the floor exercise that has a boundary that isn't always easy to respect — the winner? Gabby Douglas.

Even as a chemistry teacher in Chicago Public Schools, Karen Lewis made her students work hard to find answers according to one of her former principals.

Where it's unsafe to be outside, libraries provide haven for kids

By Lolly Bowean
TRIBUNE REPORTER

It was a warm and sunny day outside, but Xavier Parker, 10, was deep into a computer game at Thurgood Marshall Public Library when his father walked in and told the boy he was about to go to a store.

"Stay in here," Xavier's father, Jimmy Giles, said, leaving the boy in charge of his 6- and 8-year-old brothers. "Don't go anywhere until I come back and get you."

Giles is a single father and he doesn't like his boys roaming their Englewood neighborhood or playing outside because it's not safe, he said. So nearly every day the boys walk to the library and sometimes stay there for hours.

"They love it here," he said. "They don't want to leave."

In Chicago, neighborhoods like Austin and Englewood and suburbs such as Chicago Heights and Zion, many libraries serve as makeshift summer camps. They're a place where parents with limited means leave their kids for part of the day, and where children escape the streets.

Many of these children spend the day at the library without the guidance of a parent, said Susan Neuman, professor of educational studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, who is writing a book on public libraries and education.

Nine years ago, at age 8, Nora Kenny was diagnosed with a deformity that contributed to the need for braces. When her parents' insurance company found out about it two years ago, her coverage was rescinded.

That congenital deformity was an overbite. Now 17, Kenny again has coverage after her parents successfully fought back with the help of state insurance regulators — a battle that no longer will be necessary because a key provision of the health care reform law bans rescission of insurance.

One of the most controversial issues related to health insurance has been rescission, which is action taken by insurers to retroactively cancel a customer's coverage even if a policy is kept current, citing omissions or errors in the application as grounds for breaking the contract. TRIBUNE EXCLUSIVE COMPROMISED CARE

Sex offenders slip past net

Police list lacks names; nursing homes sometimes fail to alert cops, state says

By David Jackson and Gary Marx
TRIBUNE REPORTERS

Under Illinois law, families researching nursing homes are directed to search a state police Web site for critical information about sex offenders living in the facilities. But only 59 of the 192 sex offenders in Illinois nursing homes — or less than one in three — were listed on that online state registry, a Tribune investigation found.

The shortfall is especially acute in Chicago, where fewer than one in five sex offenders in nursing homes were posted on the state police Web site, the Tribune found.

Part of the problem is a gap in the law: Although some sex offenders can remain dangerous for decades if unmonitored and untreated, many are no longer required to register with police if their convictions or final parole dates occurred more than 10 years ago.

In addition, state investigators have documented more than a dozen instances since 2007 in which nursing homes failed to notify local law enforcement that they housed a convicted sex offender, as required by law, or failed to implement care plans to monitor and treat sex offenders inside the facilities, the Tribune found.

In some cases those offenders allegedly went on to molest vulnerable residents and even staff, according to state public health reports.

The state police sex offender registry is a critical tool for nursing home residents and their families because, under Illinois law, facility administrators don't have to divulge the identities of sex offenders

Illinois targets exam loophole

Crackdown vowed on districts that let juniors skip test

By Tara Malone and Stephanie Banchero
TRIBUNE REPORTERS

Taking aim at a loophole used to exclude academically weak 11th-graders from state testing, Illinois education officials said this week they want to create a single standard to determine when students are counted as juniors and therefore must take the exam.

The change would thrust state policymakers into what traditionally had been left to local educators to decide. And it would ensure that high schools are held accountable for the academic achievement of every student.

Because these low-achieving students did not take the rigorous exam, their home high schools were never held accountable, allowing them to skirt a central tenet of the federal

Tax bill shocker for Cook residents

TRIBUNE REPORTER

Most Cook County residents are in for another round of sticker shock when new property tax bills arrive in the mail in a few days with the median increase in many suburbs topping 10 percent and, in a handful, 20 percent.

Four out of five homeowners in the city and seven suburbs will get higher bills than last year though the city increases overall will be less dramatic. In the south side, where 94 percent of homes will see bigger bills, yet the median tax bills in several south Cook communities will actually decline year-over-year.

In Chicago, the median hike in residential bills will be about 3 percent, although the median increase in many neighborhoods will be larger, according to the Cook County assessor's office said.

As with any event involving property taxes, the size of bills and increases can vary greatly from house to house, block to block and neighborhood to neighborhood. In most areas, however, communities are in the middle point of all increases, with about half of homeowners facing higher hikes than the median and half facing less.

By Sam Roe | Tribune reporter

Frail and vulnerable residents of nursing homes throughout Illinois are being dosed with powerful psychotropic drugs, leading to tremors, dangerous lethargy and a higher risk of harmful falls or even death, a Tribune investigation has found.

Thousands of elderly and disabled people have been affected, many of them drugged without their consent or without a legitimate psychiatric diagnosis that would justify treatment, state and federal inspection reports show.

Lloyd Berkley, 74, was in a nursing home near Peoria for less than a day before staff members held him down and injected him with a large amount of an antipsychotic drug, according to a state citation. A few hours later he fell, suffering a fatal head injury.

One woman was given a psychotropic drug partly because she refused to wear a bra. Nursing home staff administered an antipsychotic medication to an 87-year-old man because he was "easily annoyed."

In all, the Tribune identified 1,200 violations at Illinois nursing homes between 2005 and 2008, according to state inspection reports. The findings are part of a two-part series. Coming Wednesday: Doctors' role in misuse of psychotropics.

In Chicago, the median hike in residential bills will be about 10 percent, although the median increase in many neighborhoods will be much larger, a spokesman for the Cook County assessor's office said.

As with any event involving property taxes, the size of bills and increases can vary dramatically from house to house, block to block and neighborhood to neighborhood. The median tax hike in an entire community is the middle point of all increases, with about half of homeowners facing higher hikes than the median and half facing less.

A composite image. On the left, a soldier in camouflage gear is kneeling in a rugged, rocky landscape, operating a mortar system. On the right, a group of people, including men in dark uniforms and a woman in a light-colored dress, are gathered outdoors, some holding flags, suggesting a memorial service or funeral.

The Chicago Tribune logo is displayed in its signature blue, stylized font. Superimposed over the letters are caricatured portraits of seven famous late-night talk show hosts from the early 2010s. From left to right, they are: Jimmy Fallon (thinking pose), Jay Leno (smiling), Jon Stewart (neutral), Stephen Colbert (frowning), Conan O'Brien (smiling), Matt Lauer (neutral), and David Letterman (laughing). The entire graphic is set against a white background within a red rectangular border.

Reading and refuge

Where it's unsafe to be outside, libraries provide haven for kids

By Lolly Bowean
TRIBUNE REPORTER

It was a warm and sunny day outside, but Xavier Parker, 10, was deep into a computer game at Thurgood Marshall Public Library when his father walked in and told the boy he was about to go to a store.

"Stay in here," Xavier's father, Jimmy Giles, said, leaving the boy in charge of his 6- and 8-year-old brothers. "Don't go anywhere until I come back and get you."

Giles is a single father and he doesn't like his boys roaming their Englewood neighborhood or playing outside because it's not safe, he said. So nearly every day the boys walk to the library and sometimes stay there for hours.

"They love it here," he said. "They don't want to leave."

In Chicago neighborhoods like Austin and Englewood and suburbs such as Chicago Heights and Zion, many libraries serve as makeshift summer camps. They're a place where parents with limited means leave their kids for part of the day, and where children escape the streets.

Many of these children spend the day at the library without the guidance of a parent, said Susan Neuman, professor of educational studies at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor, who is writing a book on public libraries and education.

Retired cop goes on trial for 2004 death of his third wife

Drew Peterson's day in court has finally come.

Nearly three years after the disappearance of his fourth wife, Stacy, made national headlines, the retired Bolingbrook police sergeant will go on trial Thursday in the death of his third wife, Kathleen Savio.

Peterson, 56, maintains his innocence, but winning his freedom won't be easy. He must overcome a prosecution that will paint him as an ex-husband hellbent on stopping Savio from getting a cut of his police pension. For a look at the key players in the trial, turn to page 1.

Illinois targets exam loophole

Crackdown vowed in districts that let juniors skip test

CHICAGO TRIBUNE REPORTERS

Taking aim at a loophole designed to exclude academically weak 11th-graders from state testing, Illinois education officials said this week they want to create a single standard to determine when students are counted as juniors and therefore must take the exam.

The change would thrust state policymakers into what traditionally had been left to local educators to decide. And it would ensure all high schools are held accountable for the academic achievement of every Officials with the Illinois State Board of Education said the new direction needed to end a mounting pattern of abuses.

Nearly 10,000 students now in their final year of high school — about 7 percent of all Illinois 12th graders — skipped the two-day Prairie State Achievement Exam last spring for no apparent reason, according to a new state analysis.

These students did qualify as juniors in May and their districts chose to test them, state records show. But months later, in October, they were listed as 12th graders — seemingly skipping 11th grade.

Because these low-achieving students did not take the rigorous exam, their home high schools were never held accountable, allowing them to skip a central tenet of the federal

Finally, read through this

The image shows a newspaper layout with ten examples of bad headline placement, each circled in red. The examples are:

- This happens to be: A large, bold headline at the top of the page, centered horizontally.
- Here's another headline for you: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-right area of the page.
- Finally, you might want to read through: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-left area of the page.
- Finally, read through this: A large, bold headline positioned in the bottom-right area of the page.
- The Newspaper: A large, bold headline at the very top of the page, overlapping the header area.
- Bad wrap: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-left area, partially cut off by the left margin.
- Layer cake: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-left area, stacked vertically with other text.
- Off balance: A large, bold headline positioned in the bottom-left area, creating an imbalance with the rest of the page.
- Inadequate drop: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-left area, with insufficient vertical space below it.
- Low-right anchor: A large, bold headline positioned in the middle-right area, creating a low-right anchor effect.

Each circled area highlights a specific problem in headline placement, such as poor contrast, lack of balance, or inappropriate wrap.

Setting type: READABILITY IS KING!

Making type readable, is not an exact science. Choosing the right typeface and setting it in a way that both allows for easy reading AND evokes the thematic content of the content is something of an art. But there are a number of findings about legibility research that are generally agreed upon:

Text set in lower case is more readable than text that is set in upper case, or capital letters.
